

This book features 50 lochs, both inland and sea. Some have been featured in Canoeist as guides or parts of guides but most are taken from a completely new study. They are generally the larger ones but not so large that they become open coastline. They are accessible by public road without the need for long carries to get on and off the water.

They do not include lochs which require commando techniques to access. Neither do they include the less interesting ones used for water storage which leave wide bands of dead grey rock along the shoreline for much of the year when drawn down.

Only three of these 50 lochs are Foxys.
